The Adriatic lizard orchid is a plant species which grows on South European grasslands with calcareous soils. It is mostly distributed around the Adriatic Sea. The plant becomes between 30 and 70 centimetres and has purple-white flowers.

A small range of this species' habitat is situated in the Alpine region. The status of this species in this area has been assessed as 'bad'. Due to the status in Hungary the overall Pannonic assessment is 'inadequate'. In the Continental region its status is 'favourable' due to the Slovenian data. Particularly in the Czech Republic and Slovakia this species is performing badly. This species is rare and threatened by the mowing of grasslands and changing agricultural practices, mainly fertilisation.
